Delbanco's Critique of the Current State of College: Delbanco argues that American college has lost its way, becoming a fragmented and overly specialized institution driven by market forces rather than intellectual pursuit. He criticizes the current emphasis on professional training, vocational skills, and economic outcomes, arguing that these priorities have overshadowed the core values of a liberal arts education: critical thinking, intellectual curiosity, and the development of ethical citizenship. He examines how college has shifted from a place of religious and moral formation to a secular institution focused on intellectual development and civic engagement. He highlights the key figures and movements that shaped the American college experience, including the rise of the land-grant universities and the influx of students from diverse backgrounds.

Delbanco's Vision for the Future of College: Despite his critiques, Delbanco remains optimistic about the potential for college to reclaim its core values and contribute to a more just and equitable society. He calls for a
